EPISODE SEVEN

APR -1 1922

THE RAJAH'S REVENGE.

When the aeroplane containing Archie Vale and Ralph reach considerable height in the air, the drugged leopard sent as a "present" revives and the men are horrified to see the wrapping slowly unroll and the leopard's head appear. The frightened animal leaps into the car and there is a terrific struggle, in which the two men are victorious but are forced to land once more in the Rajah's grounds, from sheer exhaustion. Ralph tells Vale that he sees the whole scheme now. It has just been a ruse ~~the~~ employed by the Rajah to get rid of him and that he is sure that Betty is not really in need of medical aid. He begins to scheme at once how to get Betty out of the Rajah's hands.

The Rajah coming back from seeing the two men off in the airplane, seeing Betty has revived, tries all his wiles to beguile Betty into a friendship with him, offering her the most gorgeous jewels, telling her of his great riches, which she may share and the wonderful life that will be hers if she will but remain there with him, but Betty holds herself aloof. The neglected favorite wife is watching the scene, unobserved by Betty and the Rajah, her anger and resentment showing Betty will fare ill at her hands.

Betty inquires for Ralph and the Rajah tells her that he is now dead, and the best thing she can do now is to marry him.

There is a scene between the neglected wife of the Rajah and the Rajah in the garden, in which he tells her that her beauty is gone and he will have no more of her. The neglected wife then tries to kill Betty, going to her room with a dagger, but is prevented by the faithful ape, and then is questioned by Betty, who then tells her that she does not intend to stay there or marry the Rajah, that she is trying to get back to her home and that if she will but help her escape, the Rajah will be glad to return to her. Finally the Rajah's wife consents to do this.

Meanwhile one of the servants rushes up to the Rajah and informs him that the winged ship has returned and soon the exhausted aviator is dispatched by the Rajah's servants, while Ralph, who has gone to find Betty, is being hunted by the men. The Rajah tells one of his servants to exchange clothes with the dead aviator and when Ralph returns to the ship with Betty they will give him a surprise.

The Rajah's wife hastens in to tell Betty that Ralph has returned but cannot find her. Ralph is taken prisoner by the Rajah and a death by torture is planned for Ralph. The Rajah tells Betty that he has offered her marriage and she has rejected it, now she shall become his slave and that she shall witness the death of her lover on the following day. A great entertainment is planned, the animals in the arena of the Rajah's private menagerie are left unfed that they may be all the more vicious on the morrow.

The following day when the gala is at its height, Ralph is brought out and placed against a high arm in the center of the enclosure, where the famished animals may torture him by jumping and snatching at him from below and his death may be one of horror and slow death. He then sends for Betty to be brought in to witness the horror and to see what happens to those who cross the will of the Rajah.
